Years of Teaching: 13

I started my first year of teaching in 1991 working for Clear Creek ISD. I remember telling that class at the end of the year how amazing and special they all were. As I cried and wished them well in 5th grade the next year, I thought, I will never have another class touch my heart like they did. After 13 years of teaching, I am getting ready to bid farewell to still another “favorite class”.

I only need to think of former students who have called me to be a reference for them so they can volunteer in the town where they’re going to college. I think about another student who emailed me a few years ago to say, “Coach Stone. I am just about to start my student teaching, and I just wanted you to know that I hope to be a teacher just like you.” And then a year later called to tell me she had been named Rookie Teacher of the Year at the school where she got her first teaching position. My greatest accomplishment as a teacher will never be found on plaques, certificates, or awards but will be evident in the lives my students choose to live as adults. Students who have grown into selfless individuals determined to make a difference in the lives of others.
